

The Next Noble Experiment

-First of all, many built-in protections and great wages and benefits. Second, what the lay person perceives as excessive will be generously compensated.

-Example of the latter?

-Beating. With, of course, just cause.

-You'll pay for the privilege?

-That's the idea.

-Will he be a better participant then?

-Absolutely! Even though there's a contract, you must always reestablish order in certain circumstances. Things have a tendency to get loose, everywhere, everytime.

-What I get is that your participant will live as decently as a citizen in a Scandinavian country, with the one stipulation.

-He'll be a slave. I'm not ashamed to say the word. Not racist anymore. Mostly whites interested.

-Will this slave be mixed in with the population?

-No way. Isolation gives him a chance to succeed without the rabble rousers from both parties screaming into his ear.

-I think of it more of a Republican idea. Party of Lincoln-- to drip some battery acid on you.

-More than that has been dripped! And I remain a proud Republican! My enlightened version of slavery transcends party though.

-I'd like to say Good Luck but...

-Don't believe in it! Rather, in planning. Six month into this project and already a waiting list of thousands!

-Americans wish to become slaves?

-Better than what they've got now.
